National Yearbook Week celebrates the lasting value of yearbooks

As the first photos are selected for this year's edition, the Trojan Yearbook staff at Troy is celebrating value of their work during National Yearbook Week, October 5-9. National Yearbook Week is observed by schools to acknowledge the important role that yearbooks play in narrating a school's story and providing a portable and lasting way to connect students to each other and their school. Today's yearbook staffers learn journalism, writing, communications and business skills in real time as they commit long hours and leverage innovative technology to capture the school's personality, events and stories for all students and groups within the school.

"The Trojan Yearbook reflects the traditions, spirit and culture of All Troy ISD campuses and our yearbook staff is working smart and hard to make this year's edition an outstanding record of our school year," Debbie Ray. This week will kick off the official sales of the 2009-2010 Trojan Yearbooks.

If you are interested in being a part of this year's exciting yearbook and would like to purchase a yearbook or sponsor an ad, please contact the Trojan yearbook staff by e-mailing Debbie Ray at my e-mail address and we will gladly get in touch with you.

The first National School Yearbook Week was held in October 1987 by proclamation of President Ronald Reagan. It coincided with the Bicentennial celebration of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights, guaranteeing freedom of the press. The week of special yearbook-related activities commemorates excellence in scholastic journalism and acknowledges the publication efforts of yearbook advisers and staffs across the country.
